Goulburn in the early 1870s did not have a rapid expansion in industries or in population, if we judge by the population of Ratepayers. There were still the same number of tanneries, hotels, banks, flour mills, newspapers etc. There were bakeries, butchers, saddlers, doctors, a Medical Hall, cordial manufacturers, orchards and even brickyards and newspapers. Although these pages detail the various ratepayers of Goulburn, in terms of population, we must add to the total all the spouses, the children, boarders and even workers who were provided for by employers.

Under the heading 'Address for Notices' one will find many blanks, principally because the references were to land held and not to buildings. There were those who preferred to invest money in land rather than in a bank. Banks could become insolvent and depositors thereby lose their savings; no matter how the economy fluctuated, the land did not disappear.

The Rate details do not indicate the differences between 'slab huts, slab houses, slab cottages, cottages or huts'. These apparently belonged to the less financial advantaged; yet there were some very substantial homes which still stand in 1991. In 1872 there were 37 slab huts: in 1874 43 slab huts. In 1872 there were 26 slab houses, but in 1874, 72 slab houses. Constructions described as 'huts' declined in the same period from 58 to 35.

A point to remember in examining the rates levied, rates had to be paid every six months, so that if a cottage was rated in these sheets at 5/10 $\frac{1}{2}$ , the full year's levy would have been 11/9d.

A helpful addition to the rate listing for 1874 is the inclusion of Section and lot numbers over previous years. This often helps in the identification of parcels of land and leads to the exact location. Unfortunately, where buildings were erected, that information has not been supplied.
